Learn at Your Own Pace with Financial Learning from ITCU

As this latest school semester started, teachers around the country were looking to make “virtual learning” a new way to educate their students. By now, you’ve probably had a fair amount of experience attending classes electronically and discovering new ways to learn about everything from pre-calculus to world history. But did you know InTouch Credit Union also has some educational resources you can learn from where you want, when you want?

We won’t be able to help you prep for the SATs, and we cannot translate your French homework, but if you’re looking to learn more about the basics of budgeting or what a credit score is, we can help! Head over to www.itcu.org/financial-awareness for our own version of “virtual learning,” where you can watch more than 30 animated videos on many financial topics. These videos, part of the It’s a Money Thing® series, provide a three-minute overview of a topic in a lighthearted and funny way, perfect for quick bursts of learning. (And they are legitimately funny, and not that “awkward” funny your physics teacher once tried.)

There’s also the Knowledge of Financial Education (KOFE) platform, where you can watch similar videos, test your knowledge and track your progress across more than a dozen topics. There’s even an option to set a financial goal and identify the steps to help you succeed.

Class is (virtually) in session, and ITCU can help you learn the lessons that will benefit you outside the classroom. Stop by the ITCU.org website today and see what you can learn!

Working for you and your financial well-being.
